Brief Description of Research Project	Development of a one-semester course on leadership, ethics and academic conduct will expose students to leadership principles they will use in the workforce, ethical dilemmas they may face during their academic training. The proposed course will address predicaments they may face after they complete their education, how to identify such quandaries, and the tools needed to contend with ethical problems. Exposure to ethical training will help build personal ethics and prepare students how to deal with the dilemmas when they arise. We must ensure that our graduates of NDSU’s transportation program are knowledgeable about ethics. Through readings and case studies, we will foster an understanding of professional ethics, and establish personal ethical standards in the one credit course. The PI will develop a “reader” of various texts regarding ethics for students to use as a resource.
